Opioid/Fentanyl Trends and Investigations

Course Objectives:

Opioid abuse effects every community in the United States. Opioid overdose is now the leading cause of accidental death, and the rates are not subsiding. Now police departments across the country are being asked to deal with the extremely dangerous synthetic opioid, fentanyl.

This course will instruct officers on the history of the crisis, how to recognize signs of abuse and overdose and how to combat the illicit drug operations in their community.

This two-day course will consist of lecture, case studies and best practice for safely handling of fentanyl as life saving techniques from exposure / overdose.

The history of the rise of opioids

Students will gain an insight to the factors that lead overdoes from opioids to become the leading cause of accidental death in the United States.

Opioid and fentanyl identification

Included in this block of training will not only be the different types of opioids, but also their origin, physical effects on the body, addictive properties, and signs of abuse and overdoes.

Police Operations

Conducting investigations into opioid dealers presents many unique challenges to both uniformed and plain clothed officers. Students will be provided some ideas and best practices to combat drug dealers and to deal with mass overdose events.

Dark and Deep Web Overview

Students will get an understanding of what the “dark web” is and its impact on drug investigations in the 21st century.

Local and National Drug Trends

An open discussion on what students are seeing locally in their respective jurisdictions as well as what impact the national trends will have on them.
